NUMBER 41

4TH ANNUAL POTATO AND APPLE SHOW

The essay contest held in connection with the Top O' Michigan contest is attracting considerable interest among the teachers and children of the rural districts of northern Michigan. The Bloom Company of Detroit, a commission firm, is offering $15.00 for 1st place to $3.00 for 5th place to the winners in this contest.

The subject of the essay is "How I Would Grow and Grade Potatoes (or apples) for Quality." This subject is a very timely one. Every grower of potatoes and apples in northern Michigan should be interested in the vital problem of grading their products.

The boys and girls entered in this contest will be contributing a great deal to the growers of northern Michigan in addition to carrying off the cash prizes. In order to be eligible to competition in the contest, the girl or boy must be enrolled in school and not be advanced beyond the 8th grade. Some of the other requirements are as follows:

The essay must be limited to 1,000 words. The essays must be submitted to the teacher of their own school who will send the best two to the county school commissioner. The county school commissioner will forward the best three to the premium committee of the show which will select the best one to represent the county.

Three candidates from each county will be guests of the potato show on Friday the 5th of November. Candidates must be present on that date to win the prizes.

Winners will be announced at a dinner in honor of the school children Friday noon.

Essays must be in the hands of the school commissioner by the 28th of October and in the hands of the committee by November 3rd.

Essays must be written in ink or on regular office paper.

For further information address Mr. A. C. Lytle, Secretary Top-O-Michigan Potato and Apple Show, Gaylord, Mich.

COMMUNITY SADDENED BY DEATH OF YOUNG GIRL

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Vallad Passes Away Sunday

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Vallad was saddened Sunday, October 10, when their youngest daughter, Sadie Luella, passed away at 10 o'clock a. m., after nearly five months illness.

Sadie Luella Vallad was born in Maple Forest township, April 27, 1906. Here her childhood was spent, and she graduated from the eighth grade in the Maple Forest school. She then attended the Frederic high school, graduating with the class of '23 at the age of 17. Here was a lovable disposition and she has many friends who are heartbroken at her untimely demise. Realizing the uncertainty of her recovery she was beautifully resigned to the will of the Lord, resigned to His will to live for Him or to go.

Besides her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Vallad, she is survived by two sisters, Mrs. James Thompson of Merrill, Mich., and Mrs. S. A. Randall of Flint, Mich.; three brothers, Norman Vallad of Michelson, Warren and Russell Vallad of Grayling; a grandmother, Mrs. Hollaway Buck, who lives at the Vallad home; also a very dear friend in the person of Mrs. Wesley Laprow whose devotion to the young lady during her long illness has endeared her to the family. The young couple had been friends since childhood.

Funeral services were held in Frederic, Tuesday, October 12, at one o'clock p. m. at the Methodist Protestant church. Rev. Davison of Grayling officiated and beautiful music was rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Lanzo Randall of Flint, accompanied by Mrs. D. Blain of Grayling.

Burial was in the Maple Forest cemetery, the resting place of other members of the Vallad and Buck families.

Among those from out of town who attended the funeral services were: Mr. and Mrs. Norman Vallad of Michelson, Rev. and Mrs. James Thompson of Merrill, Mich., Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Randall of Flint, Mr. and Mrs. Lanzo Randall of Flint, Mr. and Mrs. James Buck of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. Burt Buck of Bay City, Mr. and Mrs. Amos Buck of Cadillac, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Vallad of Standish, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Vallad of Standish, Mr. and Mrs. James DeFain of Bay City.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to extend our sincere thanks and appreciation to our many friends who were so kind and helpful during our long illness and loss of our dear daughter and sister. For the beautiful floral offerings from friends and also from the County Official Board, Board of Supervisors and Poor Commission.

We also extend our most sincere thanks to Rev. Davison for his words of comfort, Mr. and Mrs. Lanzo Randall for the hymns rendered, and the Grayling greenhouses for the courtesy extended.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Vallad, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Vallad, Rev. and Mrs. James Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Randall, Mr. and Mrs. Warren Vallad, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Vallad, Mrs. Hollaway Buck, Mr. Wesley Laprow.

CANADA AND U. S. JOIN IN FIGHTING DIPHTHERIA

Proceeding under a common understanding to control the dread disease diphtheria the greater portion of the United States and Canada are joining hands. During September and October a great effort will be made to save all children safeguarded by the use of toxin-antitoxin, special attention being given to pre-school children, the group in the greatest danger of diphtheria. Concentrated effort is to be directed against smallpox during November and December, and against typhoid fever during January and February.

SCHOOL NOTES

Editors: Janice Bailey, Edward Mason, Ethel Taylor.

A Freshman's head is full of air. Of air, his hot and bright. A Sophomore's head is full of naught. Of naught but "take life easy." A Junior's head is full of love. The love that's got in college. A Senior's head is full of brains. A greater amount of knowledge.

High school according to Shakespeare.

Lawman year Comedy of Errors.

Sophomore year—Much Ado about Nothing.

Junior year—As You Like It.

Senior year—All's well that ends well.

Miss Swinton—"Take this sentence, Take the cow out of the lot. What money?"

Theodore W.—"The Cow."

A girl, a class, a date, a quiz, perhaps, out late, no pass—Gee whizz.

George—"I wish I went to a barber college."

Janice—"Why?"

George—"Then I could cut all my classes."

DeSoto discovered the Mississippi river; therefore it is Spotted water.

Football is known familiarly as the pigskin game. We suppose that is because of the many rooters it has.

The chemistry class will begin laboratory work Thursday. The class will be divided into two parts, one part working two hours Thursday, and the other on Fridays.

George S.—"I'm sure Miss Rothenberger is German."

Pauline—"How's that?"

George—"Because her marks are so low."

Freshie—"Do they ring two bells here when classes pass?"

Isbrand (bright Junior)—"No, they ring the same one twice."

Ada—"Where are you going?"

Azilda—"Chemistry exam."

Ada—"Going to take the acid test, eh?"

The Junior class is planning a Halloween dance for Oct. 30.

Edward—"What happened to your patent leathers?"

Earl—"The patent expired."

Carl—"Were you ever alarmed about your studies?"

Lacey—"Yes, every morning at 6 o'clock."

We know a fellow who is so dumb that he thinks he will graduate in four years.

In Mr. Burnham's Arithmetic class: If peanuts sold for ten cents per pound and steamboats sailed on roller skates, how many lolly-pops would it take to paint the dome of the Capitol building at Washington?

Miss Cottle in Biology—"What animal makes the nearest approach to man?"

Theodore—"The mosquito."

Sport is any kind of work that you are not paid for.

Clayton W., in Shorthand class—"What was the last word, please?"

Who was the absent-minded professor who shaved the cat and kicked himself in the face?

Helen—"Did you hear about Jack?"

Helen—"No, what did he do?"

Helen—"He fell yesterday and bumped his head on the piano."

Ellen—"Get hurt?"

Helen—"No; he lit on the soft pedal."

A freshman is as impossible to disguise as a Ford.

"I guess I've lost another pupil," said the professor as his glass eye rolled down the kitchen sink.

FOOTBALL

The Grayling high school football team played its first game of the season with Cheboygan, Oct. 8. Cheboygan has the best team it has had in years and our boys were out-weighted by twenty pounds per man.

Grayling made several fine runs of 25 to 40 yards. Three completed passes were made which showed fine team work. One of the passes was about forty yards. Our gains were too scattered throughout the game to give our team any advantage.

Among our players who played a very good game were: E. Fenton, L. Stephan, N. Stephan, C. Lindrose and Alva Stephan.

Grayling and Cheboygan are on about the same level as Michigan State and the U. of M. The last game

EX-POSTMASTER PAYS $1108 FINE

HOLGER F. PETERSON PLEADS GUILTY TO EMBEZZLEMENT

Holger F. Peterson, former Grayling postmaster, was required to pay a fine in federal court at Bay City Tuesday of this week amounting, it is reported, to $1108.00 and costs amounting to $420.00. He had been charged with embezzlement to which he pleaded guilty in the May term of federal court.

The charges against Mr. Peterson, according to the court records are as follows: Charged with refusing to deposit in U. S. postoffice at Saginaw from March 31, 1924 to May, 1924, certain funds that the post office regulations demand, despite repeated requests that he make such deposit.

Indictment was returned against him May 29, 1924, alleging the following counts:

First—Embezzlement of $26.26 from government P. O. funds.

Second—Refusal to turn over amount, $26.26 in money order funds to Inspector R. B. Hain.

Third—Embezzlement of money derived from sale of stamps, stamped paper, box rents, newspaper postage to the amount of $996.81.

Fourth—Converted this money to his own use.

Fifth—Embezzlement of $40 in treasury savings stamps.

Embezzlement of $1514.7 of stamps and stamped paper.

Arraigned May 25th. Sentence deferred to Oct. 4. Indicated that payment of $1,150 be required.

On the latter date Mr. Peterson was in the east so the case was continued to Oct. 12 when he appeared in person and paid the fine and costs.

between them ended with about the same score.

The line up was as follows:

Alva Stephan—Center.

Charles Wiley—Right guard.

Roy Hunter—Right tackle.

Carl Speck—Right end.

Henry LaGrow—Quarter.

STORY OF THE CIRCUIT COURT

Circuit court was convened at one o'clock Tuesday afternoon. The court room had been filling fast until every seat was taken and many stood along the walls. There was low, friendly conversation and greetings. One lone man in the inner-circle looked to us quite dejected. No doubt he was a bit-worried.

Judge Guy E. Smith, attorneys, clerks and stenographer take their places, arrange and rearrange chairs and papers and then came Sheriff Bobbenmeyer and Deputy Sheriff Phil Quigley. "All stand," said the sheriff, "Hear ye, hear ye, hear ye, the circuit court of Crawford county is now in session!"

Judge Smith read the calendar. On motion by Prosecuting Attorney Nellist the arson charge against Robert Jackson was dismissed, because of lack of evidence sufficient to convict.

Discussion of the Moshier-Archambault case was that the defendant had not fulfilled an agreement for settlement. The witness was a witness to the fact that the defendant was not in the city at the time of the crime.

The South Branch school fund case was continued because of absence of attorney.

The Schneider-Dinsmore and Antrim Iron Co. v. Helper & Clinkostine cases were dismissed without prejudice.

Judge Smith ordered the Prosecution to proceed with arrangements.

Robert Jackson, arrested on an arson charge, plead not guilty.

James Giffin, indecent exposure, plea of not guilty entered by direction.

John P. Piskor, for violation of the prohibition law, plead guilty.

Carl Thuston, for violation of prohibition law, plead guilty.

Jurors are drawn in the Giffin case and take places: Alfred Nephew, Robert Feldhauser, Jay Odell, Henry Stephan, George Wolf, Adolph Delaire, Frank Milikin, Carl Golnick, Clark Yost, Albert Lewis, Fred Anderson, Frank Seren, A. R. Caid.

The juror was questioned carefully by the prosecuting attorney as to citizenship, residence, acquaintance with defendant and plaintiffs and attorneys, belief in upholding laws of country, business dealings with parties or attorneys and freedom from thoughts and prejudices that would make it wrong to sit on jury and give verdict for both parties.

Ross also questioned the jury. Mr. Lewis was excused and Chas. Miller called, questioned and accepted after which all were sworn by the clerk and addressed by the prosecuting attorney.

Facts were stated and not much denied, the defense dwelling on the words "desiderately" the physical and mental condition of the defendant.

The judge reviews the case and addresses jury after which they were led to jury room and locked in.

During the brief recess there is conversation and smoking, and all are in their places to hear the verdict as the jury enter. A. R. Caid, foreman announced "Not guilty." There is just that, order.

On the trial of Jackson, the jurors drawn were: Frank Barber, Wade Hoagland, Frank Milikin, A. R. Caid, George Biggs, Henry Stephan, Harold Leggett, Albert Lewis, Frederick Anderson, Alfred Nephew, Lester Roy.

Alfred Nephew asked release, as he is a neighbor of the defendant. D. M. Shoff was called, and accepted. Henry Stephan was excused by request of the prosecutor. Richard Babbitt was called and excused because his father was to be a witness, the judge and Attorney Defoe, releasing them and never before been called upon to release a juror for that reason. Hugo Schreiber was called. Schoff was excused by defense. Miller was called and excused because of acquaintance with plaintiff. Adolph Delaire was called and all other jurors were excused until nine o'clock Wednesday morning.

Seven witnesses were called and court adjourned by the sheriff with his "Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye! Circuit Court is now adjourned until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning."

Wednesday Session

Again the court room was well filled and the case of Jackson continued. The evidence being considered not sufficient to warrant conviction the judge decided to take the case from the jury and directed a verdict of not guilty.

John P. Piskor of Detroit admitted bringing liquor, whiskey into the county for which he was to receive $100 for doing so. The judge reminded him that the people were not interested in his liquor dealings in Detroit but objected to them here, several being in the business here. However the defendant will need the hundred dollars for he drew a fine of eight hundred dollars or six months to one year in Ionia reformatory.

Carl Thuston insisted he had made home brew, beer, not moonshine, for own use and never engaged in the business and sold none. How did the officers find out, he would like to know! He made "quite a bit" and put it away in chests for himself and guests. "No, I did not sell any." He was excused until the next term of court and his bond continued.

The jurors drawn for the Niederer-Atkinson case, for trespass, were: Lester Roy, Harold Leggett, Clark Yost, George Wolf, Henry Stephan, John Highlen, Hugo Schreiber, A. R. Caid, F. Seren, F. Barber, Fred Anderson, Albert Lewis.

The evidence, not denied, was that Mr. Niederer, causing expenses, by loss of work, doctor and hospital bills amounting to about $250. Mr. Atkinson had agreed to pay for loss

A FRIEND—WRONG OR RIGHT

There is an old judge of the supreme court in New York who recently in private conversation was heard to vigorously defend one of his friends who had fallen by the way-side. He was challenged for defending a man who had been proved to be wrong.

"That was only one failure," said the old judge, "consider the fine things about him."

"But," objected one of the critics, "I don't see how you can stand up for this fellow even if he is a friend. He certainly was wrong."

"Any man will stand up for you when you are right," replied the old judge. "But it takes a friend to stand up for you when you are wrong."

And there was silence.

THE EASY MONEY BOYS

Every day sees the birth of new schemes for separating man and his money. Barnum was right only his estimate was too low for this day and generation, and the swarming hosts of trusting individuals who invest in wildcat schemes prove it. Conservative estimates place the amount of profits taken by fake stock vendors alone last year at $600,000,000. The reason for the displacement of this enormous amount of money that should go into legitimate enterprises is easily seen in the big crop of suckers who are constantly inviting these wholesale frauds in worthless enterprises.

When any man goes after easy money, there is always somebody near at hand to help him obtain his object. The inherent desire of individuals to reap large profits on small investments is what makes the average easy mark so glib when the glib salesman of fake stock is hawking his wares. As long as such desire and glibness combine to make game of the fraudulent easy, the promoters of such fake stock schemes will continue to take their toll. The easy one in which the victim helps in his own undoing, and the protection that can be given him depends, at least partially, on his willingness to heed the warning against biting tempting bait.

One of the most satisfying reactions to life is that of having a comfortable home to go to when there is no place else to go.—Toledo Blade.

JUST FAIR PLAY

No merchant expects you to buy at home, just because he happens to have a store in your town. All that is in an opportunity for fair comparison of both quality and price, then let the decision of a sale rest with you. This much, in fairness you owe to those who make your community progress possible. When the peddler, who pays no taxes and supports no local institutions, calls at your door it is your duty to buy only by comparison. If the local merchant can give you just as good values as the peddler has to offer—and they can—don't you think you owe them your patronage? No church spire was ever raised toward heaven, no school was ever built, no community enterprise was ever brought to fruition on the money you spend with a peddler. Think this over.

EVERY VOTE COUNTS

The one thing that might beat Mayor Fred W. Green of Ionia, Republican nominee for governor, is the overconfidence of Michigan Republicans and their failure to go to the polls on Tuesday, November 2nd. It is conceded that he can be elected by an overwhelming vote—if his friends do not get careless. If they fail, nothing might happen. Democratic opposition this year appears hopeful, they are being strongly financed regardless of their cry of money in politics, and are devoting most of their energies in trying to roll up some sort of a party vote in Wayne county, relying on this to meet the effect the light vote in the rural districts.

Fred W. Green stands pledged to an administration for real service at Lansing. His friends, who know him best, know that he will keep that promise. He will never seek the easy course, but as governor of Michigan will be fearless, independent, and will keep faith with the people of the state. If you want a man trained in business and executive ability, fully capable of carrying out high ideals of government, then vote for Fred W. Green. Your vote is one of your most valued possessions, but it is valuable only if you use it!

All entered into the games and a jolly good time was had by all who attended.

Miss Blanche Goodale, sister of Mrs. Jess Schoonover, who is in Florida, leaving for that place about three weeks before the hurricane disaster, has written to Laper friends and her letter appeared in a recent issue of the Laper newspaper. She describes the hurricane as terrible and that she was busy doing relief work. She was staying with some friends on one of the Venetian islands off the coast of Miami, at the time of the hurricane, and tells of the storm beginning about 7 p. m., gradually growing worse all night and at 3 a. m. of their venturesome trip from the island to Miami over a causeway two and a half miles long, and how when the engine of their automobile stalled they got out and pushed the car across the causeway amidst waves crashing over them. At 6 o'clock in the morning a tall in the storm came and as they started back home found the causeway submerged and the storm coming back so they had to find shelter again, which they found in a gas station. She tells of getting back to the Walkings home on Venetian island, finding it a sad sight with holes in roof and windows blown in. The danger had dashed as high as second story windows.

LYDIA of the Pines

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—With her baby sister, Lydia returns from play to the sunny home of her mother and father, Amos Dudley, at Lake City. Her mother is a friend, and her own devoted admirer, and she is a girl of affairs with Lydia, makes up his mind to go into politics.

CHAPTER II.—Lydia, Patience and a companion, Kent, Moulton, playing by the lake, are noticed by an old woman, who is a friend of Lydia's mother. Lydia is pulled out, and the water is taken home by Lydia and Kent. Her mother is a friend, and her own devoted admirer, and she is a girl of affairs with Lydia, makes up his mind to go into politics.

CHAPTER III.—Lydia, Patience and a companion, Kent, Moulton, playing by the lake, are noticed by an old woman, who is a friend of Lydia's mother. Lydia is pulled out, and the water is taken home by Lydia and Kent. Her mother is a friend, and her own devoted admirer, and she is a girl of affairs with Lydia, makes up his mind to go into politics.

CHAPTER IV.—Patience succumbs to an attack of diphtheria, leaving Lydia feeling that her trust in God is not a popular playmate. Lydia is pulled out, and the water is taken home by Lydia and Kent. Her mother is a friend, and her own devoted admirer, and she is a girl of affairs with Lydia, makes up his mind to go into politics.

CHAPTER V.—Grieving for the loss of little Patience, Lydia's health fails. Lydia is pulled out, and the water is taken home by Lydia and Kent. Her mother is a friend, and her own devoted admirer, and she is a girl of affairs with Lydia, makes up his mind to go into politics.

CHAPTER VI

The Cooking Class

Lydia with parted lips and big, wistful eyes stood quietly beside Miss Towne.

"What you giving us," said Kent. "Red's my favorite color."

"Red's all right," said Lydia, tossed her head. "But the dress! She ought to have better. A dress like that, both would have been better than this."

Kent was truly enamored of pretty Olga but he looked at her angrily.

"You girls make me sick," he grunted and started dodging among the dancers, across the room to Lydia's side. Olga stood pointing.

"What's the matter?" asked Charlie Jackson.

"Oh, I just said Lydia's dress was a fright and Kent went off mad."

Charlie in turn stared at Lydia.

Kent in the meantime was grinning at Lydia amiably.

"Hello, Lydia. Want to dance?"

"I can't. Don't know how," replied Lydia, despondently.

"Easy as anything. Come on, I'll teach you."

Lydia seized Kent's lapel with fingers that would tremble slightly.

"Kent, I don't stir. My back bends don't match and my skirt hangs awful."

"Oh, shucks!" replied Kent, angrily. "You girls are all alike. Red's my favorite color."

"Mine too," said Charlie Jackson at her elbow. "What're you two arguing about?"

"Her dress," growled Kent. "I don't see anything the matter with it, do you?"

"Nope, and it's on the prettiest girl in the room, too, isn't it?"

"You bet," returned Kent, believing, though that he lied, for Olga was as pretty as a tea rose.

Lydia blushed and gasped.

"If you won't dance, come on over and have some lemonade," suggested Kent.

"If I sit in the window, will you bring me a glass?" asked Lydia, still mindful of the back breadth.

"You take her to the window and I'll get the lemon," said Charlie.

Kent led the way to the window-seat. "You're a good old sport, Lydia," he said. "Charlie'll look out for you. I gotta get back to Olga."

He returned to make peace with the pink organdie. She was very lovely and Kent was having his first flirtation. Yet before he went to sleep that night the last picture that floated before his eyes was of a thin little figure with worn mittens clasped over patched knees and a ravished child's face looking into his.

Charlie Jackson sat out two whole dances with Lydia. Their talk was of Amos and of nothing—Lydia longed to talk about Indians with him but didn't dare. Promptly at ten, Amos appeared at the front door.

Lydia's last party was over. Amos and old Lydia were charmed with Lydia's description of it and were sure she had had a wonderful time. But Lydia felt that the dress had made of the party a hideous failure. She knew now that she was marked among her mates as a poverty-stricken little dower whom popular boys like Kent and Charlie pitied.

And yet because life is as kind to us as we have the intelligence to let it be, it was out of the party that grew slowly an new resolve of Lydia's—to have some day as pretty hands and as well-mannered feet as Olga and Eliza and Clara to learn how to make her dresses so that even the composing of an organdie might not be beyond her.

John Levine was running for sheriff on the Republican ticket. He was elected early in April by a comfortable majority and invited Amos and Lydia to a fine Sunday dinner in celebration at the best hotel in town. Lydia's life was so different from that of any of the children that she knew—that growing into adolescence with the old bond of play disappearing, she fell back more and more on resources within herself. This did not prevent her going faithfully once a month to call on Margery Marshall. And these visits were rather pleasant than otherwise. Margery was going through the paper-doll fever. Lydia always brought Florence Dombey with her and the two girls carried on an elaborate game of make-believe, the intricacies of which were entirely too much for Elvira Marshall, sitting within earshot.

Amos' garden was a thing of beauty. Its trim rows of vegetables were bordered with sunflowers, whose yellow heads vied in height with the rustling ears of corn. Amos had a general grudge toward life. He had a vague, unexpressed belief that because he was a descendant of the founders of the country, the world owed him an easy living. He had a general sense of superiority to his foreign-born neighbors and to the workmen in the plow factory.

But in his garden, all his grudges disappeared. He always felt nearer to his wife, in the garden. She, too, had been bred on a New England farm. He always felt as if the line of her dress was a part of her.

Lydia greatly preferred weeding the garden to cleaning the house. Indeed the contrast between the fine garden, the well-kept patch of lawn and the disorderly house was startling.

One afternoon in August, clad in her bathing suit, now much too small for her, she was working in the garden when a voice behind her grunted:

"Eat!"

Lydia jumped and turned. The old saw-tooth of two years before stood before her. She was as pitifully thin as ever. As she stared at the ugly old Indian, Lydia's throat tightened. She seemed to feel baby Patience's fingers clinging to hers in fear.

"Want some vegetables?" she asked, motioning toward the garden.

The squaw nodded eagerly and held up the dirty apron she was wearing. Lydia began slowly to fill it, talking as she worked.

"Where do you live?" she asked.

The Indian jerked her gray head toward the north. "Big Woods."

"But that's twenty miles. It must take you a long time to walk it. Poor thing!"

The squaw shrugged her shoulders. Lydia stared at the toothless, trembling old mouth, hideous with wrinkles, then at the gaunt and shaking old hands.

"Haven't you anyone to take care of you?"

"All sick—boy sick—man sick—girl sick. All time sick, all time nothing to eat."

"But won't some other Indian make you a garden, a little one?"

Again the squaw shrugged her shoulders. She produced a string from inside her waist and tying the apron up bag-like, she slung it over her shoulder. Then she gave Lydia a keen glance.

"Friend," she said, briefly, and turning, she tottered painfully out of the gate.

Followed by Adam, Lydia walked thoughtfully out upon the little pier Amos had built. It was hard to understand how the Indians with all their rich pine land could be so poor. She resolved to ask her father and Levine about it and turned a somersault into the water. She swam about until tired, then turned over on her back to rest. Lying so a shadow drifted across her face and she raised her head. A gray birch-bark canoe floated silently beside her. In it, in a gray bathing suit, sat Charlie Jackson.

"Goodness!" exclaimed Lydia. "How in the world do you do it so quietly. I don't see. Come on in. It's as warm as soda."

Charlie shot his canoe to the pier and in a moment was floating beside Lydia. She took a deep breath, let herself sink and a moment or two later came up several yards beyond him. He did not miss her for a moment, then he started for her with a shout. A game of tag followed ending in a wild race to the pier.

"You certainly are a little sunshin in the water," panted Charlie, as they sat with feet dangling off the pier.

"Ought to be, I'm in it enough," returned Lydia. "Charlie, there's a poor old squaw came here today. What's the matter with the Indians? Why don't they work?"

Charlie's mouth twisted in a sneer. "Why don't they work? Why don't the whites give 'em a chance? Dirty thieves, prowling round like timber wolves. Ask Dave Marshall. Ask that gumshoeing crook of a Levine. Don't ask me."

"Levine's not a crook," shouted Lydia. "He's my friend."

The sneer left Charlie's face and he laughed. "Your friend is he, little sunshin?"

"Yes," said Lydia, furiously. "He gave me Adam," hugging the dog's ugly faithful head. He immediately tried to sit in her wet lap. "And he's done as much for me as my own father."

"If he's your friend," said the Indian gently, "I won't speak against him to you again."

Lydia instantly was mollified. Charlie was so old and so young! He was so different from Kent that staring into his deep black eyes, Lydia instantly felt his alien race.

"It's time to get supper," she said. "It's time to get supper."

Charlie nodded and untied his canoe.

"Daddy," Lydia said that night at supper, "why should Mr. Marshall and Charlie Jackson both say Mr. Levine is a crook?"

Amos at a piece of bread meditatively before replying. "Any man that goes into politics in this country leaves his reputation behind him. You and I'll never have a better friend than John Levine."

Lydia nodded. She was only a child, after all, and still retained implicit faith in the opinion of those she loved. She went back to school that fall full of interest and importance. She was a sophomore now and very proud of the fact that she knew the ropes. Her arrangement with Billy held for his second-year books. With much pinching of the grocery money, Lizzie had achieved two new galleas, sailor suits and so while she felt infinitely inferior to the elaborately gowned young misses of her grade, Lydia was not unhappy.

She planned a real feast for Thanksgiving. She negotiated with Billy Norton for the exchange of two pounds of fudge for a brace of wild duck. The Saturday before Thanksgiving, she gave the house its usual "lick and promise" and then started out with her states to enjoy the first of the season.

She had a glorious morning. There was no snow and the lake had frozen crystal clear. The air was breathless. As she skated she chanted, to improvised verses, bits of verse.

"She hunted through Scottish mountains and moors, she whirled from Ghent to Aix and still high-heeled in the land of visions, took off her skates and entered the house. She banged the door, then stood for a moment staring. Elvira and Margery were seated before the living room stove, while old Lizzie sat on one edge of Amos' arm chair eyeing the two belligerents.

Margery was wearing a new fur coat. Her beautiful black eyes looked out from under a saucy fur-trimmed hat with a scarlet quill on the side. Elvira wore black broadcloth with fur collar and muff. Lydia, in a remodeled coat of her mother's, and her old tam and mended mittens, recovered from her surprise quickly.

"Hello," she said. "When did you come? This is the first time you've ever been in our house. Mrs. Marshall, isn't it?"

"Yes," replied Elvira, "and, with a glance at Lizzie, 'I wouldn't be here now if Mr. Marshall hadn't made me.'"

"Oh, mamma," protested Margery. "I wanted to come."

"You hush up, Margery! What I came for is that Mr. Marshall would like to have the three of you come to our house for Thanksgiving dinner."

Lydia instantly was mollified. Charlie was so old and so young! He was so different from Kent that staring into his deep black eyes, Lydia instantly felt his alien race.

"It's time to get supper," she said. "It's time to get supper."

"You hush up, Margery! What I came for is that Mr. Marshall would like to have the three of you come to our house for Thanksgiving dinner."

Lydia suddenly giggled. "Don't worry, Mrs. Marshall, we can't come. We're going to have company ourselves for Thanksgiving."

Elvira gave a huge sigh of relief. "Well, that's too bad," she said. "We're going to have a grand dinner, too."

"So are we," retorted Lydia.

"How's Florence Dombey?" asked Margery. "Mamma, can't I stay and play with Lydia a while?"

"We'll stay a few minutes," said Elvira, losing her furs and settling back in her chair. "It's a real small place, Lizzie, but you can do so little work now, I s'pose it's just as well."

Lydia had produced a pasteboard shoe box of paper dolls which she gave to Margery. She cuddled Florence Dombey in her arms and gave one ear to Margery's questions as to the names and personalities of the paper dolls, the other to Elvira's comments.

"It's a little small," sniffed Lizzie. "It's a little small, anything you ever lived in, Elvira, all Dave said enough lumber he stole from the government to start a bank."

"Land, Lizzie, don't be so cross," said Elvira. "I suppose you've heard the talk about John Levine? He's getting in with that half-breed crowd on the reservation that the Indian agent's such friends with. They say Levine's had money enough to marry a squaw. He's so dark, I wouldn't be surprised if he had Indian blood himself. Land knows nothing would surprise me about him. They say he's just naturally crooked."

Lydia and Florence Dombey suddenly stood in front of Elvira.

"Don't you say such things about Mr. Levine," said Lydia slowly, cheeks bright, eyes as blue as Florence Dombey's.

"Well!" exclaimed Elvira, beginning to pull her furs up. "I don't seem to be able to please you two with my conversation, so I'll be going. Margery, get up out of that dirty door. I never cared much about Amos' wife, she was too proud, but at least she was clean. She'd turn over in her grave if she knew what this house looked like. Come, Margery, the horse will be cold, standing so long."

Lizzie opened her mouth to speak but Lydia shook her hand, and the two stood in silence, watching the departure of the visitors. When the door had closed Lizzie burst forth in an angry trade, but Lydia only half listened. She looked slowly around the living room, then walked into the dining room and thence into the kitchen. She opened the pantry door and stared at the dust and disorder, the remnants of food, the half-washed dishes.

She came slowly back into the living room. Old Lizzie was replenishing the stove, still muttering to herself. Lydia observed for the first time that her apron was dirty. Thinking it over, she could not recall ever having seen Lizzie with a clean apron. A deep sense of shame suddenly enveloped Lydia.

"Oh, I wish someone had taught me," she groaned. "I wish mother had lived. Everybody has to go and die on me! I suppose Lizzie and dad'll be next. Adam helps to keep the house dirty. There's dog hair everywhere."

"Don't you get worked up over

Elvira Marshall, child," said Lizzie. "I hate her," exclaimed Lydia, "but what she said about the house is true. Anyhow, I've learned how to clean pantry shelves, so here goes."

She tied one of Lizzie's aprons round her neck, pushed a chair into the pantry and began her unsavory task. It was dusk when she finished and led Lizzie out to observe the shiny, sweet smelling orderliness of the place.

"Land, it does make a difference! If the rheumatism didn't take all the ambition out of me, I'd keep it that way for you," said the old lady.

"You do it, every Saturday. Gosh, I'm tired on the living room couch. Lizzie, give me some of your mutton tallow to rub on my hands. The cooking teacher says it's good for chaps."

The highly satisfactory Thanksgiving feast was eaten and praised. The dishes were washed and set away in the immaculate pantry, and Amos and John Levine were smoking by the fire. "Seems to me this room looks all licked up," said Levine.

Amos nodded. "Lydia's coming along. Place was like a cyclone this morning for an hour, but the result stays. She's growing like her mother."

"She's only a child, and small for the governed." We had it in school. It must mean Indians, too."

John Levine laughed. "There you have it. And Charlie is right, we are liars and thieves, but we have to be. Might be right in this world."

"Speak for yourself, Levine," cried Marshall.

"Levine!" exploded Charlie. "Are you Levine? You're the man that's my sister's!" his voice rose to a shout. "I'll beat the face off of you right now."

And he made a sudden spring for the astonished Levine.

NOT UP-TO-DATE

Why do you speak of so excellent a product as an out-of-date?

Why, one doesn't find "macabre" "dramatic" or "ineluctable" used in his pages once.

He and Levine nodded to each other. Amos shook hands and Dave kissed Lydia, catching a dark squint on Levine's face as he did so.

"Let's play paper dolls," said Margery, as soon as she had pulled off her coat.

"You play 'em," replied Lydia.

"I'm awful tired."

"Why should a baby like you be tired?" inquired Marshall, pulling her to his side as she seated herself in Amos' armchair.

"If you'd tasted our dinner," said Elvira, "you'd know why she and Lizzie should be half dead."

"I wish I could 'tasted it," replied Marshall. "Have a smoke, friends?"

Amos took a cigar but Levine refused.

"Come, John, come," said the stout banker, banteringly. "This is a holiday and you and I at least agree on Lydia. Let's stop war for the day, eh?"

Levine's sallow face hardened; then he caught Lydia's blue gaze on him as she stood beside Marshall. It was such a transparent, trusting gaze, so full of affection, so obviously appealing to him to "be nice," that in spite of himself he grinned and took a cigar.

Amos settled back with a sigh of satisfaction. He enjoyed company and had had no one but John since his wife's death.

"Co-ee! Lydia!" came a call from the lake shore.

Lydia ran to the kitchen door. Charlie Jackson and Kent were skating up to the bank.

"Come out for a while," cried Kent. "I can't. I've got company. Come on up and get warm," returned Lydia.

The two boys slipped off their skates and came up to the cottage. Kent needed no introduction, and Lydia made short work of Charlie by saying to the assemblage at large, "This is Charlie Jackson. Come on up to the stove, boys."

The boys established themselves on the couch back of the baseburner.

"Hello, Marg," said Kent. "What you doing?"

"Paper dolls," returned Margery from her corner, without looking up. Charlie Jackson stared at the beautiful little black head bent over the brightly-colored bits of paper with interest.

Amos took up the conversation. "If we could get a Republican congress, that block of pine and black loam, twenty miles north would be given to its rightful owners."

"Meaning the full bloods, I suppose," said Levine with a short laugh.

"Yes—full-blooded whites," returned Amos.

Charlie Jackson suddenly threw back his head and roared.

"I'm a full-blood Indian," he said quietly. The three men looked at him as if they saw him for the first time.

"Well, what of it?" asked Marshall shortly.

"This of it," said Charlie, tensely. "that you whites with your Constitution and your Declaration of Independence are a lot of liars and thieves."

Marshall turned purple, but John Levine spoke quickly. "Easy there, my boy! You're talking of things you don't understand."

"Oh, but he does," interrupted Lydia eagerly. "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." We had it in school. It must mean Indians, too."

John Levine laughed. "There you have it. And Charlie is right, we are liars and thieves, but we have to be. Might be right in this world."

"Speak for yourself, Levine," cried Marshall.

"Levine!" exploded Charlie. "Are you Levine? You're the man that's my sister's!" his voice rose to a shout. "I'll beat the face off of you right now."

And he made a sudden spring for the astonished Levine.

Farm Bureau Notes

R. D. Bailey, Co. Agricultural Agent

"The world marches forward on the feet of little children."—Philip Brooks.

We interpret the above statement from one of America's great preachers, to mean that real improvement of the race will come through giving children the proper training. It is so, it would be sensible for parents, school officers and all tax payers to demand that agriculture be given the rightful place in all rural schools.

By steadily teaching the fundamental principles of agriculture to its children in all schools, Denmark has raised herself from being down and out, to a place where her farming is a model for the world.

Farming in Crawford county could stand a little improvement.

More Farm Boys and Girls in College

Agriculture grows more complex every year. It needs trained men and women to meet its problems. The same thing is true of every other field of work. America is calling constantly for leadership in agriculture—and leadership mainly from the ranks of college men and women.

The enrollment in agricultural courses diminished 26 per cent from 1914-1925 to 1925-1926. First, there was the war, which drew vast numbers of young men into the army and into essential industries.

Then, the period of post-war prosperity made many hesitate to leave money-making work. The agricultural depression shortly thereafter produced a general tendency away from preparation for farming.

Agricultural enrollments have begun to come back. There were a few more freshmen last year than the year before. Now is the time, in my estimation, to study agriculture. There are opportunities for trained young men.

Secretary J. A. S. Dept. of Agriculture.

When to Buy Dairy Feeds

When you buy dairy feeds do you study the prices in different months of the year and then buy feeds, or do you just go and buy them? If you do you will be better off to know that the prices in certain months are lower than others.

According to the dairy department of the University of Illinois a survey of the feed markets shows that the prices in certain months are lower than others.

June, July and August: linseed meal in May, June and July; cottonseed meal in August, September, January and February; and gluten feed in May, June and July. It is possible for a dairyman to save money on his feed bill by buying feeds at the proper time. A large number of the dairymen raise necessary feed for their cows but it is found desirable to supplement the home-grown feeds with high protein feeds. Therefore study the feed markets and buy the feeds you need when the prices are lowest.

Water before dairy cows at all times increases yields.

Management Hints

Keep Pure Bred Fowls

Pure bred poultry pays in cash, opportunities and satisfaction.

Selection Heavy Layers for Breeders

The pullet or first laying year is usually the most profitable one for market eggs. Yearling hens are chiefly valuable as breeders.

Should be culled rigorously at the end of their first laying year, and only those showing vitality and heavy production kept over for breeders.

Lice

Lice live and reproduce on the bodies of fowls. They have biting mouth parts and live on filth and scurf of the skin. They cannot suck blood.

In 10 to 14 days the eggs hatch.

Blue Ointment Treatment

At a drug store buy Blue Ointment containing 33 per cent mercury. On the end of a finger place an amount about the size of a pea and rub this well into the skin of the fowl just below the vent. Also put a very small amount under each wing, and a few little on the back. Do not use in setting hens until the chicks are hatched.

Sodium Fluorid Treatment

Dip Method—Dissolve one-half pound of Sodium Fluorid in ten gallons tepid water and dip fowls in this solution only during suitable summer weather. Ten gallons of solution will treat about 150 hens.

Finch Method—Use powdered Sodium Fluorid with thumb and finger placing a "pinch" under the feathers next to the skin, as follows: "One pinch on the head, one on the neck, one below the vent, one on the tail, one on each thigh, and one on the underside of each wing." One pound treats about 100 hens.

See U. S. Farmers' Bulletin No. 801 or No. 957.

Mites

Mites live in cracks and crevices of a building where there is filth and go on to the hens for food only. They have sucking mouth parts and suck blood. They reproduce in 10 to 14 days.

Remedies—To kill mites they must be placed in contact with some strong disinfectant that is penetrating. The easiest sprayed thoroughly in the region where the mites are located will destroy them. Good coal tar dips in 2 per cent or 3 per cent solutions will prevent mites. Hen houses should be sprayed monthly or more often. After the mites are once exterminated painting the roosts occasionally with some "wood preservative" or with crude oil, petroleum, will usually prevent their reappearance.

Making More Egg Money.

Paste These Rules On The Hen House Door

Here are seven rules suggested by the Missouri College of Agriculture that will increase the profits from the summer flock:

Produce infertile eggs by removing the roosters from the flock in the summer time.

Provide clean nests and keep eggs clean.

Do not wash eggs.

Gather eggs twice daily during the summer to prevent them from being heated by the hen.

Keep them in a cool dry place away from the flies.

Market them at least twice each week.

Insist that they be bought on a quality graded basis.—Marion County (Missouri) Farm Bureau News.

Boosting Purebreds

One-Fourth More Pork

"Pigs from a purebred boar will average 25 per cent more mature weight on the same quantity of feed."

FARM BUREAU 2.—North Carolina Agricultural Ext. Service.

Purebred Swine Gain Faster

"In a Florida community where there were a good many farmers who believed in the superiority of the razor-back hog, the county agent selected a man who would be honest in feeding and weighing and who had the confidence of his neighbors. The county agent placed on his farm a razor-back, a grade, and a purebred pig for fattening. They were all put up in pens sided by side and fed the same kind and amount of feed. In 90 days the purebred had gained 87 pounds, the grade 73 pounds, and the razor-back 45 pounds." Jesse L. Smith, County Agent, Pensacola, Fla.

Influence of Condition at Calving Time

It is not too early to begin thinking about the next lactation period of our cows. Now is the time to approach the close of the present milking period.

Two things are of considerable importance to the future usefulness of these cows. The first of these is the rest period before calving; the second is that of condition of flesh and skeleton at the time of calving. The rest period has considerable influence on the condition especially of the skeleton.

It has repeatedly been shown experimentally that cows in good flesh at calving time will produce considerably more milk than they will if in poor flesh at the beginning of the lactation period. It is much easier to hold a cow up in production after she has had a good start than it is to increase her production after a poor start. It is doubtful if a cow may be brought up to what she would have produced had she been in good flesh at calving time after having had a poor start due to poor body condition. She will start production on a lower level than had she been well fed before calving and she will decline just as rapidly when she does start to go down as if she had been in good flesh when she freshened.

Bekles of the "Minnesota Station" reports data on a cow that freshened in good condition and produced 36 pounds milk daily at her best and a total of 6,544 pounds for the year. This same cow, as the result of freshening in poor condition, produced a maximum of 27 pounds daily at her best and a total of 4,468 pounds for the year.

Cows should have at least six weeks' rest before calving and two months' time is better especially where cows are in quite thin condition at the close of the lactation period. It has been demonstrated experimentally that cows that have reasonable rest periods will produce more milk than the same or similar cows would produce without the rest period.

There is a great temptation to continue cows too long in milk production before drying them up. Of course, there are many cows that need no attention. Many go dry of their own accord, often too soon. On the other hand, there are thousands of cows that are so persistent that some attention must be given in drying them up at the proper time to permit them to have 6 to 8 weeks' rest.

The first move in drying up a cow is to reduce the feed. When the daily production comes down to 10 or 12 pounds the next move is to milk only once a day for a few days, and then once every other day for a few days. At the close of a lactation period the danger from an extended udder is very much less than the kind of congestion that comes immediately following calving.

The dairymen who are getting the most milk per cow year after year are the men who allow a reasonable rest period between lactations, and have their cows in good condition at calving time.

Save Potatoes

Next year's seed potatoes should be saved while digging now. Save the best shaped ones, of good size, out of large yielding hills. Thus, your potatoes will be improved.

A sample of 32 potatoes of uniform size should be saved to exhibit at the Top O' Michigan Apple and Potato show at Gaylord, November 3, 4, 5, 1926, in each prize. You can win a cash prize of good size.

Delegates to the Republican state convention, from all counties except Wayne, nominated candidates for state offices to be voted upon at the November election, as follows: Ernest A. Snow, justice of supreme court; John S. Haggerty, secretary of state; William W. Potter, attorney general; Oramel B. Fuller, auditor general; Frank B. McKay, state treasurer.

What a Rexall 1c Sale Is

It is a sale where you buy an item at the regular price, then another item of the same kind for one cent. For illustration, Klezco Dental Cream is 50c. You buy a tube at this price and for 1c more or 51c you get 2 tubes.

This sale (on Rexall mdse. only) was developed by The United Drug Co. as an advertising plan. Rather than spend large sums of money to convince you of the merit of these goods, they are spending it on this sale by permitting us to sell you a full-size standard item for 1c.

Sacrifice in profit is justified knowing the goods will please you.

Mrs. Minnie Daugherty and Mrs. Getta Fischer visited at the latter's home in St. Helen Friday.

Rosemary and Tom Mahoney of Bay City spent Saturday and Sunday visiting their grandmother, Mrs. Rose Balhoff.

Mrs. Otis McLeod has been absent from her duties in the M. C. train-master's office since Saturday owing to illness.

Norval Stephan had the misfortune to injure his knee in the Grayling-Cheboygan football game Saturday at Cheboygan.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Parks of Houghton Heights were in Grayling Tuesday, buying souvenirs of a salesman stopping at Shoppenagon Inn.

Mrs. Earl Wood returned to her home in Bay City Saturday after a visit with her mother, Mrs. Ellen Failing in Beaver Creek township.

Mrs. O. E. Woods, accompanied by Misses Ina Belfis and Shirley Stow of Wolverine, visited at the home of the former's brother, Dan Woods and family Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Dunham have returned after spending a week with her parents in Detroit. Mrs. Dunham had been called to Detroit owing to the serious illness of her father.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Hanson, Miss Marian Reynolds and Ronnow Hanson motored to Vanderbilt Thursday evening. While there they spent the evening with Mr. and Mrs. John Yuill (Lillian Ziebell).

Roy Brown of Bay City visited the parental home over Sunday. He is still with the DuPont plant in Bay City, which has been taken over by other parties with Mr. C. T. Clark at the head, it is claimed.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Reynolds spent the week end visiting the former's sister, Mrs. Guy Ried and family in Twining. Mr. Ried who was recently injured in an auto accident is getting along nicely at the present time.

Among the people attending the Cheboygan-Grayling football game at Cheboygan Friday afternoon were Mrs. Lela Kidston and daughter, Miss Ada, Miss Helen Schumann, Mrs. Minnie Daugherty and son Ellis and George Granger.

Forty Hour Devotions will be held in St. Mary's church beginning next Sunday morning and closing Tuesday morning. This is a special annual occasion in the Catholic church, the time devoted to prayer and adoration of the Blessed Sacrament.

Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Zalsman were on a motor trip last week to Paris, Comstock Park and Grand Rapids. At the former place they visited Mrs. Zalsman's brother, Jason Lydell, and at Comstock another brother, Dwight Lydell, each of whom are superintendents of the fish hatcheries at these places. Both brothers have been seriously ill of late but were found to be somewhat improved.

Emil Kraus returned Wednesday morning from New York where he had accompanied a Finnish young man, for the purpose of putting him on a boat and returning him to his home land, Finland. The young man had been worrying and it was feared he might soon go insane and therefore be a public charge. Not being a resident and not really wishing to go to his home land it was thought best to help him go. His friends helped to defray his expenses. While Mr. Kraus was in New York city he had the pleasure of seeing some of the world series games between the St. Louis Cardinals and New York Giants played.

Birchwood lodge on the Manistee river, of which Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm McLeod are caretakers, has changed hands. This property for years was owned by Mr. G. H. Barber of Detroit, owner of the Detroit Stove Works and Mr. William Livingston, former president of the Dime Savings Bank of Detroit. The latter passed away about a year ago and his interests went to his sons, T. W. P. Livingston and Seaborn Livingston, who have bought out the interests of Mr. Barber in the lodge. The young men expect to make extensive improvements and make it into a fine summer home. T. W. P. Livingston succeeded his father as president of the Dime Savings Bank and holds the record of being the youngest bank president in the United States.

Mr. and Mrs. George Deckett (Helen Jensen) and little daughter of Al-pena met with an auto accident near Frederic Saturday evening while on their way to Grayling to spend Sunday with the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chris Jensen. A car going north collided with the Ford coupe driven by Mr. Deckett in such a manner as to cause the coupe to turn over twice. Mrs. Deckett was badly cut but Mr. Deckett and the baby escaped without any serious bruises. The driver causing the accident merely drove on without stopping to offer any assistance. Mrs. Deckett was immediately brought to Grayling by Albert Lewis of Frederic and is at present at the home of her parents, where she is getting along as well as can be expected. The Deckett car was badly damaged.

What was formerly the firm of Wm. Mosher, contractor and builder, has now been incorporated under the title, Grayling Cement Products Co., Inc. The officers of the organization are: Wm. Mosher, president; Harry Mosher, vice president; and Charles Mosher, secretary and treasurer. This firm of father and sons will continue the business of concrete construction in all forms. Mr. Mosher has enjoyed a good business in the past and no doubt the new organization will add impetus to the business. He has been progressive about learning the new features of the work and the best methods of operation. The new firm starts out with a contract to construct a new cement garage at West Branch, which will require about three months to complete. They have our best wishes to the new company.

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Anderson of Maple Forest township at Mercy hospital Sunday, October 10, living but a little while. Funeral services for the baby were held from the home of Arnold Johnson Monday afternoon. Rev. Davison officiated and burial was in Elmwood cemetery. Mrs. Anderson was formerly Miss Ida Johnson, well known graduate nurse of Mercy hospital, who with her husband have the sincere sympathy of many friends in their sorrow.

There are a number of children who are in need of winter clothes, and anyone who has any garments that could be made over or otherwise, it would be very much appreciated if they would send them to the Health center. The ladies of the Missionary society of the Free Methodist church have volunteered to make over clothes for these children who need them. The health center is open from six in the morning until six o'clock in the evening. Leave your bundle any day.

Mrs. P. C. Peterson entertained Wednesday of last week in honor of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Wm. Fischer. Eighteen members of the family came to the home of Mrs. Peterson to bid farewell to Mrs. Fischer who left Saturday for her home in Compton, California, after spending the summer among relatives and friends in Grayling. Five hundred was enjoyed during the evening, first prizes going to Mrs. N. P. Olson and Carl Sorenson, and Mrs. Fischer was presented with a guest prize. A very nice lunch was served late in the evening. Mrs. Fischer will visit with relatives in Houghton Lake and also with her daughter, Mrs. A. R.
